A Brief History of Quilting

Broderie perse refers to the applique of cut out motifs from printed fabric onto a solid background, done since the 18th century, chintz imported from India was especially popular. As printed fabric was expensive, they cut out birds, flowers etc. and sewed them onto a large homespun cloth to make a quilt. Broderie Perse bedcoverings were reserved for guests usually.

By the 1840s the industrial revolution textiles were manufactured on a broad scale so spinning and weaving fabric was time costly and commercial fabrics were affordable to almost every family, increasing popularity of quilts. It is a myth that quilts were always made from scraps and worn out clothing. Examining pictures of quilts found in museums we quickly see that many quilts were made with fabric bought specifically for that quilt. Cont. next page

Although a few earlier quilts were made in the block style, it was uncommon until around the 1840s when manufacturing made a delightful variety of fabrics available.

In 1856 The Singer company started the installment plan so that more families could afford a sewing machine. This affected quilt making in two ways. Women could sew for their family in much less time leaving more time for quilting and secondly they could piece quilts by machine and occasionally the quilting itself was done with the sewing machine. During the American Civil War, quilts were made to raise funds for the war effort and to give warmth and comfort to soldiers. Civil War quilts were made for a cause, many representing the relevant flag. Part 3 next month.
